For smooth models (very important), this effect is fairly simple. In your fragment/pixel shader you will need the normal of the fragment being shaded. If it is very close to perpendicular ($\text{dot}(\text{surface_normal}, \text{view_vector}) \leq .01$ - you might need to play with that threshold) then color the fragment black instead of its usual color. This approach "consumes" a little bit of the model to do the outline.
